

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

ROOSEVELT D. GUY,

Plaintiff,

v.

THOMAS J. VILSACK,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 12-1557 (ESH)

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Plaintiff Roosevelt Guy filed a pro se lawsuit against Thomas Vilsack in his official capacity as Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture (“USDA”), alleging that the USDA denied his farm loan application based on his race, in violation of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (“ECOA”), 15 U.S.C. § 1691. (Compl., Sept. 18, 2012 [ECF No. 1].) Plaintiff now moves for judicial review under the Administrative Procedure Act (“APA”), 5 U.S.C. §§ 500-706. (Motion for Judicial Review (“Mot.”), Aug. 26, 2013 [ECF No. 28].) For the reasons stated below, plaintiff’s motion will be denied.

BACKGROUND

I. FACTS

In 2010, plaintiff applied for a farm loan from the Farm Service Agency (“FSA”), an agency within the USDA. (See Compl. at 1.) In a letter, the FSA denied plaintiff’s loan application on the grounds that he failed to demonstrate an acceptable credit history and that he failed to show a feasible plan to pay both his expenses and all loan payments. (See Compl., Doc. E.) However, plaintiff believed that his loan application was actually denied because of his race. (See Compl. at 2.) On September 18, 2012, he filed a complaint alleging unlawful discrimination under the ECOA. (See Compl. at 1-2, Doc. A.)

Parties are presently in the discovery stage of litigation. The Court's prior opinion discusses the significant discovery disputes that have plagued this case. (See Mem. Op., Aug. 19, 2013 [ECF No. 24].) Plaintiff has persisted in his refusal to participate in an in-person deposition. Plaintiff alleges that his "anxiety has grown so severe that [he] cannot bring himself to return to Washington D.C." (Mot. at 2.) At the request of the plaintiff, the Court held a telephonic status conference on August 21, 2013. During this status conference, plaintiff made clear that he does not intend to comply with the Court's Order that he make himself available for an in-person deposition in Washington, D.C. (See Order, Aug. 21, 2013 [ECF No. 27].) Plaintiff also verbally moved for judicial review of the administrative decision denying his USDA loan application. (See id.) At the Court's request, the parties briefed this motion, and the Court will now consider the merits of that motion.

ANALYSIS

Plaintiff's motion seeks judicial review of the FSA's decision to deny his loan application pursuant to the APA. Though the precise contours of plaintiff's APA claim are not entirely clear, the Court must construe a pro se plaintiff's motion broadly and look to the relief sought to infer the claims made wherever possible. Bradley v. Smith, 235 F.R.D. 125, 127 (D.D.C. 2006) ("[P]leadings filed by pro se litigants are liberally construed, and are held to less stringent standards than are applied to pleadings prepared by attorneys."). Liberally construing plaintiff's motion and reply, the Court understands his motion to seek judicial review of his discrimination claim (brought under ECOA) by virtue of his rights under the APA. Plaintiff views judicial review under the APA as an alternative means for adjudicating his ECOA claim without participating in an in-person deposition in Washington, D.C. (See Reply to Opp’n at 2, Sept. 6, 2013 [ECF No. 30]) (“[This] alternative . . . allows both parties the opportunity to submit a brief on the merits which will allow the government the opportunity to dispute whatever they claim to vigorously dispute.”).)

Yet, plaintiff’s motion misconstrues the relief available under the APA. Plaintiff affirmatively states in his reply brief that he is “not bringing a claim under [the] APA” and “does not wish to amend his complaint to bring claims under [the] APA.” (Id.) Instead, he is “simply using [the] APA as a discovery tool . . .” (Id.) The APA is, however, not a discovery tool. The APA only provides for “any applicable form of legal action including actions for declaratory judgments or writs of prohibitory or mandatory injunction or habeas corpus . . . .” 5 U.S.C. § 703 (emphasis added). Taking plaintiff at his word, he does not seek to undertake any legal action under the APA. Rather, he merely seeks to have the Court consider his discrimination claim under ECOA as an administrative matter on the record without the need for further discovery. (See Reply at 2.) Because the APA does not provide this procedural remedy, plaintiff’s motion must be dismissed.

In addition, despite plaintiff’s repeated assertions to the contrary, one can broadly construe plaintiff’s motion as a request for permission to bring an APA claim. The Court infers this request from plaintiff’s statement that he “has made the presentation to the court that there is an administrative record and a report of investigation in regards to the above caption [sic] subject matter in which Plaintiff moves this court to provide judicial review thereof.” (See id.) However, even construing plaintiff’s motion as a request for review under the APA, it must be denied.

ECOA creates a private right of action against a creditor who “discriminate[s] against any applicant, with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction . . . on the basis of race . . . .” 15
